A SINGULAR REFORMATORY VILLAGE .-Major Hutchinson, Inspector General of Police in the Punjab, who was lately in England, gave an account, at a meeting of a section of the Social Science Association, of a village in his district which has been formed by collecting from many other villages those who, as thieves or sturdy beggars, had rendered themselves a pest. Land was given to them, and by the co-operation of the praceful inhabitants they were supplied with seeds, and wells sunk for them, and were furnished with ploughs. -But these provisions having been made, the men were informed that henceforth they must depend on their own exertions; and that, whether living comfortably by their industry or dying with hunger from their idleness, they would not be allowed to quit the spot where they had been placed. At first, as may be imagined, there was great grumbling, much turbutence, and many threats; but when the men found that these were all in vain, and that the Government intended what it had ordered, they gradually took to their work, and after a time settled down into a peaceful and industrious little community.

Major Hutchinson added that, at a late visit of inspection to this curious village, it was found that the inhabitants had begun to feel a they were better clad, of more cleanly habits, and in a word, that a striking alteration for the better had taken place in their general condition and appearance; and that so fully rediction and appearance; and that so fully rediction are disconting to the price of that article. pride in their cottages and allotments; that conciled had they become to the change in their course of life, that they one and all declared that they had no wish to return to their former career.

The experiment, perhaps the most remarkable in the history of reformatories, was suggested by Mr. E. Prinsep, in 1860, Settlement Officer of Scalkote, and carried out successfully by Major H. B. Urmston. He compelled a predatory tribe to settle and cultivate under penalty of the lash, and two years afterwards was invited by his reclaimed thieves, burglars and fortune-tellers to a feast on the produce of their

A FATHER DIES FOR HIS SON. -There has been a terrible fire in Evansville, in which some of the best merchants' houses were burnt down. The Evansville Courier says:

"We regret to chronicle the loss of a useful man, a loving and kind husband, a brave father—for in the act of saving his son's life the father was buried beneath the burning ruins. Mr. Magennis was employed in the factory as a maker of safes and had we facto factory as a maker of safes, and had, we believe, as an assistant, his son, a lad some sixteen years old. These two were working in the upper story when the alarm was given, and, seeking to make an exit, found their retreat cut off. The father helped his son to reach a window, and pushing him from it, sank back exhausted into the raging furnace beneath. The body was badly burned, and, when the fire was somewhat subdued, there was gathered from near where the door had been, a heap of shriveled, blackened remains—all that was left of a noble man who had died while striving to save a life that was dearer than his own.'

DIAMONDS.—Some time ago one of the revenue officers of New York, distinguished himself by issuing a circular in regard to the personal baggage of passengers arriving from lar was that which specified that certain articles of luxury might be admitted free if their value was proportioned to the "station of the LEATHER, of all kinds, Harness, Bridle and abroad. One of the finest points in this circuowner." This at once raised the query what Skirting Leather, which we sell at the lowest social "station" entitled the wearing of diamonds and other jewelry. An article now before us enables us to form a judgment on this perplexing subject. It contains a list of several owners of the more valuable diamonds and precious stones worn in this country. Of these we find that a negro minstrel has a single diamond pin worth $3,000. A "late negro minstrel" has pins and rings valued at $25,000. A favorite dancer has $4,000 invested in diamonds. The wife of a negro minstrel is said to have the enormous amount of $70,000 in jewels. A circus clown has a single diamond valued at $2,000, and a cluster diamond worth $1,000. A "retired" circus performer has a thousand dollars more than this invested in these vanities. - Com. Advertiser.

A CURIOUS MARRIAGE. - A little girl, about sixteen years of age, giving her name as Mary Ettare Kehoe, in company with a boy, about fifteen years of age, giving his name as Henry Hartung, of Mott and Canal streets, appeared before Justice Hogan this afternoon, at the Tombs, and requested protection from the mother of the boy, who had carried him away from the nuptial couch Tuesday night, after he had been joined in the holy bonds of wedlock with Mary, by the Rev. Frederick Silby, of St. Ambrose church. The Judge said the mother had now no right to him, and sent the happy couple on their way rejoicing .- N. Y. Express.

SPECIAL DEPOSITORS. - A firm in Boston is about to test the responsibility of banks for the stocks, notes, bonds, &c , deposited 'a small trunks in the bank vaults, the said firm havbeen the loser of a large amount of valuable property received from a New York bank and deposited for safe-keeping. The banks of Boston have just given notice to their patrons to remove their trunks from the bank vaults, the managers of these institutions not wishing the spirit of accommodation to be construed into a responsibility for property which is looked upon as an inconvenient incumbrance.

CURIOUS CASE OF CHOLERA.—The Paris Monde tells a sad case of cholera. An elderly working man who had never manifested the slightest literary ability and no taste for letters was violently attacked with cholera in 1865. It affected his mind, and since then he has been writing poetry. He has published a volume of poems!
